Professor Fox / CRN 14548 / REMT / 4 credits
When you think of anthropology, you probably picture exotic field sites: the Arctic, the Amazonian rainforests, the beaches of the South Pacific. But contemporary anthropologists are just as likely to study Tokyo, Berlin, or Bethlehem, PA. This course examines anthropology both in and of the city. How have anthropologists thought about the complexities of urban life? How can anthropology help us make sense of urban governance? What does belonging mean in a city that is racially or ethnically diverse? We will address these questions and others as we examine the relationship between human beings and their built environments.

GS.POLS.ASIA.WGSS 395-010 The Women's Movement in China
Professor Fennell
CRN 14902 / REMT, SS / 4 credits
We will examine the state-sponsored, state-directed mass movement for the liberation of Chinese women. Beginning with Confucian notions of mother/daughterhood, to imperial system, to the role of women in the founding and establishment of the Communist Party of China, to the participation of women and girls in the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution. Gender equality issues have been a central focus of the Party. The class will look at post-reform era women's status and ask, did the Party liberate women?

GS.HIST 395-012 US and the World since 1898
Professor Pope-Obeda
CRN 14943 / REMT, SS / 4 credits
This course will explore the history of the US and the world during the long twentieth century, with a focus on how the US has shaped and been shaped by connections with the wider world politically, economically, intellectually, and culturally. The course will cover a range of topics, including America's imperial presence (both formal and informal) throughout the world, migration, flows of labor and capital, social movements across national borders, and the diverse range of state and non-state actors who shaped and were shaped by the U.S.A.'s interactions with the world. Students will be exposed to various approaches to the study of transnational US history and will also work with a wide array of primary sources. his course will be taught remotely.
